

I understand that the FCC is considering overturning the NJ consumer protection law. I find it interesting that you harass Howard Stern who the public can decide to turn on or off on their own, but that you think that telemarketers can bother me at home, and I shouldn't be able to have a way to "turn them off". Who are you trying to protect, here? If anything, this law should be strengthened so that the calls I now receive, from "charities" represented by telemarketing agencies would stop.
